Editor's Letter

The Denver University Law Review is proud to present the fourth and final issue for the 2002–2003 academic year. Distinguished members of the federal, state, and foreign judiciary have presented their thoughts on the history and practice of law and the business of judging. It is our hope that our readers will learn from the lessons contained herein.

This issue is the product of hard labor. We would like to take this opportunity to thank our contributing judges and their support staffs. Without their effort, this issue would not have materialized.

Additionally, we enlisted the aid of Kimberly Kirven and Professor Laura Ruel, both of the University of Denver School of Communications. They are responsible for the wholly unique layout, design, and organization of the following pages. Thank you and well done.

Enjoy,

David Bruce Gottlieb
