Introduction

Volume 19, issue 3 of the Denver Journal of International Law and Policy includes two articles on the topic of International Transportation Law. The Denver Journal of International Law and Policy in conjunction with the Transportation Law Journal solicited various articles from international legal scholars and practitioners for our joint symposium issue. We have selected these two articles for publication because they represent both the public and private sides of International Transportation Law.

The article written by Werner Ebke and George Wenglorz provides an in depth look at the European Community's liberalization of air transportation. In stark contrast, Dean Alexander has written a timely piece on maritime terrorism and the possible civil remedies which may be sought by individuals against the terrorists and the maritime carriers.

These articles serve to remind us of the importance of global transport and the legal issues involved, now and into the future.
