FROM THE INCOMING PRESIDENT

To the Members of the Denver Bar Association:

ERNEST B. FOWLER

Lawyers, more than any other group, are informed and interested in public affairs. They are active in the various organizations of our community. They have had, and will continue to have, a prominent part in the shaping of our governmental policies. It is my hope and purpose that during the coming year the Denver Bar Association may keep abreast of the rapidly changing and varied problems which confront the public. In our association these problems may be faced fairly and earnestly, with some hope of solution. It is fitting that the lawyers should center their interest in this association where united action may make their individual efforts effective.

We hope to present to the meetings legal questions of interest to the profession, to make these meetings profitable to the members so they will come, not because of any sense of duty, but because they enjoy the meetings and get something worthwhile from them. I hope opportunity will also be afforded for the members to get together socially, be entertained and become better acquainted—in general, to carry on the good work of my predecessors. I am counting on your help to achieve this goal.
