A Good Client

MEMBERS of the Bar acting as attorneys for estates in cases where a bank is executor or administrator find a financial institution to be a good client.

The bank's officers are experienced, understand the business in hand, are always available and appreciate the importance of legal service. Matters of accounting, collections, and other business details of which counsel are glad to be relieved are attended to by the bank. The combination of a good lawyer and an experienced trust department produces the best possible administration.

At each of the undersigned banks it is an established policy that the attorney who draws the will designating the bank in a fiduciary capacity shall be chosen as attorney for the estate.
